

REMARKS

Applicant's attorney would like to thank Examiner Jankus for his helpful comments made during a telephone conversation with the undersigned attorney on July 30, 2007. At that time, claim 31 and the Advisory Action of July 24, 2007 were discussed. In view of that conversation, claim 31 is amended herewith in the manner as discussed with Examiner Jankus.

It is respectfully submitted that claim 31 is supported by the original application as filed, including Figure 1 illustrating a block diagram of an advantageous embodiment of the invention, as well as accompanying description in the specification, including page 5, line 27 through page 6, line 29. It is specifically noted that this block diagram of the described mobile device shows the functional blocks related to the display and input-related features of the invention and specifically mentions that the mobile device may include additional functional blocks, including a memory unit. It is well-known to anyone of ordinary skill in the art that the illustrated processor 107 accesses the program code stored in a readable medium so as to perform the operations of the invention as set forth in the flow chart illustrated in Figure 2.

Furthermore, as clearly set forth at page 4, lines 11-27, specific reference is made that the described touch sensitive display includes driver software. Again, as known to anyone of ordinary skill in the art, software does not exist in the abstract without having a physical medium for storage thereof and thus must be stored in a readable medium.

In view of the foregoing, it is respectfully submitted that the readable medium set forth in independent claim 31 is supported by the application as filed.

In view of the allowance of claims 1-30 and further in view that the readable medium claimed in amended claim 31 is for execution by a processor for operating a mobile device with features corresponding to those in allowed claims, including allowed claim 1, it is respectfully submitted that the present application as amended is in condition for allowance and such action is earnestly solicited.

Respectfully submitted,

Alfred A. Fressola
